

HIT BY AN "L" ENGINE

Anton Edezyk Knocked Down and Dragged Along the Track.Lay Bleeding and Conscience While Trains Rollover Him.Must Have Climbed the Pillars to Get Upon the Structure.

Anton Edezyk, a Russian, forty-eight years old, of 100 East Eighty-fourth street, was found just after midnight lying on the tracks of the Elevated road which runs through Pearl street and Fulton street stations. He is now lying in a dying condition in Chambers Street Hospital.

From his appearance when found, the man had evidently been dragged for more than 100 yards along the track, by an engine. How he got on the structure, and how long he lay there before being seen, may never be known, unless he recovers sufficiently to explain.

There is a Third Avenue train which leaves South Ferry at midnight, bound uptown. When this train got a block above the Fulton street station this morning, the engineer, looking along the tracks, saw in the dim light the body of the man lying on the structure in the center, between the tracks. The engineer had scarcely caught sight of the body before the entire train had passed over it.

Two blocks further along, at the Franklin Square station, the engineer reported the matter to Gatekeeper Henry Boldt.

As soon as the train pulled out of the station, Boldt hurried along the tracks until he arrived at the point where the man lay. It was just at the portion of the road where the structure makes a sudden turn, and Boldt was upon the body almost as soon as he saw it.

The man's clothes were torn, and exposed on the left side of the body, just above the hip, a large wound, from which, as the injured man groaned and moved convulsively the blood flowed, and running along the line of the structure trickled down into the street.

The man was without shoes or socks. The right side of his body was badly scraped and bruised as though he had been dragged along the beams for a great distance. His face was covered with blood, and there were a dozen or more deep cuts upon his head.

As soon as Boldt saw the condition of the man he ran along to the Fulton street station and called to the stationer there. Then they hurried back and carried the injured man to the latter station, where the operator had already telegraphed for an ambulance to Chambers Street Hospital.

Follicleman Charles A. Schultz had been in Pearl street, below the Elevated road structure, and had seen two men carrying a third as they passed by one of the electric lights on the structure. He was up on the station platform at the time the man was laid down, as comfortably as possible.

The man was not unconscious, and before the ambulance arrived he told the policeman what had happened. He said that Edezyk spoke along the line of the structure, and that he was a butcher. Edezyk spoke along the line of the structure, and that he was a butcher. Edezyk spoke along the line of the structure, and that he was a butcher.

He did not know how the accident happened. He was removed to the hospital in a dying condition.

The employees of the Elevated road immediately started about trying to determine how the man had struck the structure. This morning they said they had not yet decided. They were quite sure that he had not gone up the side of the structure, but that he had climbed up there. That point is being climbed up there. That point is being climbed up there.

The police believe that Edezyk climbed up by one of the pillars. Twenty feet beyond the Fulton street station, the grade of the street brings the station very near to the street, and it would have been very easy for him to have climbed up there. That point is being climbed up there.

THREW A MATCH ON THE FLOOR

A Young Girl's Carelessness Starts

a Blaze in a Flat-House.

Tenants Badly Frightened and Two

Buildings Damaged.

The careless throwing on the floor of a lighted match is supposed to have caused a fire which broke out at 2.30

this morning in a six-story brown-stone flat-house at 133 West One Hundred and First street.

Before the flames were extinguished they had extended to the two-story frame house next door, and caused in all $2,100 damages.

Mrs. Mary Brill lives on the first floor of the flat-house with her seventeen-year-old daughter Ethel, and her nine-year-old son Ernest. The girl went to a picnic last night, and it was after midnight when she returned. She lit a lamp in an inner room, and threw the match on the floor. Fifteen minutes later the lamp was put out, and the house was in darkness.

Two hours after that John Sullivan, of 127 West One Hundred and First street, who was returning from the same picnic, saw a bright glare shining through the window of Mrs. Brill's apartment. He looked in, and saw the flames. He called out to the neighbors, and awoke the family, rang the bells of the other flats in the house and ran off to the fire alarm. The fire companies came in about 10 o'clock. The fire was extinguished
